

The Systems Synergy Facilitator Pathway

The business case for sponsors

What your organisation invests, what it gets back and how the pathway runs.

In brief

One place. A systems facilitator who stays.

What it is	A certification pathway that trains one of your people to run system-level work with your senior teams, combining the LEGO® Serious Play® method, Peter Senge's Fifth Discipline and Bohmian Dialogue.
Investment	From £15,000 per place, priced as executive education.
How it runs	An intensive with a small cohort, then supervised practice on a live challenge your organisation chooses, then certification at the level reached.
2027 cohorts	London and Singapore, spring and autumn. Only 8 places in each cohort, 32 in total.
Faculty	Led by Sean Blair, author of The Systems Synergy (2026), with supervision from Sean and the faculty at each step.
Dates and time	Dates, format and time away from the role go to the 2027 register first.

Why sponsor a place

What your organisation gets back.

The problem

Strategies that won't stay made

Recurring problems, decision churn and initiatives that fade are symptoms of a system nobody can see whole. External consultants leave with the insight.

The capability

An internal systems facilitator

Your participant learns to run system-level work with your senior teams, and keeps doing it after the programme ends.

The proof

Practice on your live work

Supervised practice happens on a real challenge your organisation chooses, so value arrives during the programme, not after it.

The comparison

Executive education, applied

Comparable in price to business school programmes, with supervision on your own work instead of case studies.

Questions your approver will ask

Why not hire a consultant?

A consultant takes the insight with them. A sponsored place keeps the capability inside your organisation, for every senior team that needs it.

When do we see value?

During the programme. Supervised practice runs on a live challenge you choose, so the work pays back before certification.

What do we commit to now?

Nothing. Joining the 2027 register is free, and dates and fees reach the register before anyone else.
